

Bruce Fulton

NED & Chair, AusIMM Sydney Branch

Bruce is Chair of the Sydney Branch of the AusIMM and an organiser of this event.

He is a strong supporter and mentor of resource-industry focused students and new professionals, especially in NSW and in particular the Sydney region and has been an Advisory Board Member to the University of New South Wales School of Mineral and Resources Engineering for several years. He has a special interest in making sure our young professionals have all the “tools” they require as they head out on their respective journeys to become fully fledged resources industry professionals.

Bruce is also Managing Director of Ophir Partners, a strategic advisory firm focused on providing executive and board leadership solutions to companies globally across a range of sectors, including resources, and drawing from his more than thirty years’ experience in the global resources sector, including in exploration, operations, business development and governance.

He is a passionate resources industry advocate who further drives our industry’s sustainability through his contribution to AMEC (Association of Mining and Exploration Companies), while seeking better outcomes for the resources sector, especially junior companies.

Bruce has served on the boards of several listed and unlisted resource companies and is a long-time member of many leading industry professional organisations, including the Australian Institute of Mining and Metallurgy. Bruce has an MSc (Hons) in Earth Science from Waikato University and an MBA from Deakin University.
